

SUBSCRIBE TODAY

The Miami Herald

Subscriber Services

MiamiHerald.com

Current: 81°

81° / 66°

Complete Forecast

Search Recent News Archives Web for

Welcome Guest

Sign Up | Sign In | Member Benefits

Jobs

Cars

Real Estate

Apartments

Local Shopping

• ShopLocal

• Newspaper Ads

All Classifieds

• Create an Ad

• Find an Ad

Dating

News

Sports

Entertainment

Business

Tropical Life & Home

• Books

• Family & Parenting

• Food

• For Women

• Gardening

• Gay South Florida

• Health

• Home

• People

• Pets

- Shopping
- Religion & Values
- Style
- Travel
- Weekend
- Wheels & Waves

Opinion

Visitor's Guide

SPECIAL PUBLICATIONS

- Home & Design
- Condo Living
- Style & Entertaining
- Home Guide

Back to Home >

Sunday, Mar 19, 2006

Home & Garden

 email this

 print this

Posted on Sun, Jan. 22, 2006

ONLY IN NEW YORK

When furniture meets tight spaces, it's Dr. Sofa to the rescue

Shlomi Gal-on started his dismantling business after seeing heartbroken owners abandon their couches during moves because of tight spaces.

BY RACHEL TEMPLETON

Columbia News Service

A potential crisis was looming around the corner in Manhattan's Gramercy Park. "Dr. Sofa" was on call, his two-way radio continuously crackling with updates. In the service elevator of a white-glove apartment building, a seven-foot-long leather sofa bed was stuck.

"Did you get the back off? Take off an arm!" he yelled to his team, already on the case.

"Dr. Sofa," whose real name is Shlomi Gal-on, tends to the torturous ordeal of moving furniture into tiny New York apartments. With little more than a staple gun and handsaw, he eases the pain of space-challenged New Yorkers longing for a normal life with normal-size furniture.

"Most furniture is not made for New York," Gal-on, 31, explained in a thick Israeli accent, his crisp blue shirt contrasting with his unshaven facial scruff. "But people want nice furniture. They don't want a skinny bench just because they live in the city."

Dr. Sofa's cure: Cut the sofa and other furniture into pieces, move in the parts and reassemble them as if nothing happened. His business is not unusual in New York City, where he has at least five competitors.

AWKWARD SPACES

Maxwell Gillingham-Ryan, founder of ApartmentTherapy.com, a site dedicated to space-challenged urbanites, understands the need for Dr. Sofa's business. "The city is made up of old buildings that over time have been chopped into smaller spaces," he said. "People are dealing with very awkward spaces.

"People are caught between wanting to live here because they love the city, and wanting to have a big, comfy sofa," he said. "It's hard to have both."

All this spells good business for Dr. Sofa. Gal-on is a fourth-generation furniture professional who started his business after seeing heartbroken owners abandon furniture mid-move for lack of space. He left his job as a mover to experiment with dismantling and reassembling sofas.

"They started calling me Dr. Sofa, the furniture surgeon," Gal-on recalled. "The name just stuck."

Manufactured by designers with no regard for cramped city living, most couches are made with easy-access driveways, wide garage doors and spacious living rooms in mind.

Poorly planned moves account for most of Gal-on's business because people often neglect to measure their furnishings, he said. Other customers overlook measuring small hall space, short elevators and narrow doorways.

30-DAY GUARANTEE

For $250 to $350 a job, Dr. Sofa promises to move any piece of furniture into any space, reconstructing it to the original condition. There is a 30-day guarantee on all jobs.

Seventy-five percent of Dr. Sofa's business comes from furniture "emergencies" -- a couch wedged in a stairwell or unable to get past a door jam. Many calls come in the middle of the night, when movers have long given up and occupants are left wringing their hands.

"A lot of times a guy calls and is totally hysterical," Gal-on said. "They are praying for the Messiah and here comes Dr. Sofa." Gal-on says he commonly meets customers on street corners where they sit guarding a beloved sofa left for the landfill.

Most of the furniture emergency calls come via a 24-hour pager routed to Gal-on's home phone. Not unlike a team of physicians, Gal-on or a team manager will arrive to perform "surgery," usually within four hours.

The concept might have seemed crazy to Tabitha Anthony, a human-rights specialist from Queens, until she realized her cherished sectional was bigger than the elevator of her new co-op. The doorman told Anthony about Dr. Sofa, and she called the team to tackle the task.

"I wasn't so sure at first," Anthony said. ``When they ripped off the upholstery I almost cried."

The operation was a success, however, and when the sectional was reassembled in her apartment, Anthony was pleased with the outcome.

'When people come into my apartment, they say, `Oh, what a big sofa you have!' " she said.

SPECIAL NEEDS

Gillingham-Ryan agrees that the need for Dr. Sofa is real. "People here live with special spatial concerns the rest of the country does not have," he said, adding: ``Living in New York City is completely abnormal."

By the time Gal-on arrived in Gramercy Park wher the seven-foot-long leather sofa bed was stuck, his two-person team had things nearly under control. They had removed upholstery from the sofa back. But after turning the couch into several creative angles it was clear it would not fit. Further surgery was required.

Staples attaching the leather to the frame were wedged off with a mysterious tool. A few minutes of rapid hand sawing freed the problematic left arm. That accomplished, the sofa skeleton slid smoothly through the elevator, headed toward apartment 6N for reassembly.

The bright apartment with bay windows overlooking Gramercy Park was nearly empty, with only a few small pieces of furniture inside.

"I've been to this building 15 or 20 times," Gal-on said, examining the apartment's minuscule 3-foot-wide doorway. ``Prewar buildings are great for business."

 email this

 print this

About Herald.com | About the Real Cities Network | Terms of Use & Privacy Statement | About Knight Ridder | Copyright

